5th GEAR- Warning Signs!

You know you have an unhealthy 5th gear if you:

• Are exhausted, ill, and close to burn out because you don’t know how to stop working.
• Have long-term relational issues because in their opinion your work always comes first.
• Overuse 5th Gear and tend to crash into an unhealthy 1st gear.
• See that your spouse, kids, and friends are no longer surprised when you are busy working.
• Notice people around you hinting that you are working too much.
• Make it a pattern of eating meals in front of your computer or working instead of connecting.
• Stop being asked by people to be involved in social activities or casual connections.
• Use work and study as an excuse to avoid people.

You know you have an unhealthy 4th gear if you:

• Consistently start your day with email.
• Hear people consistently say that you seem obsessed by work and tasks.
• Think that achievement is the driving motivation for your life.
• Set no boundaries on your time, and typically default to 4th Gear.
• Feel anxiety separation when you are away from email or phone.
• Are consistently drained & never fully recharged.
• Feel like it takes a lot of effort to consistently get into 3rd/2nd gear settings.
• Struggle for consistent sleep and your mind is always problem solving.
• Are often physically present with your friends and family, but intellectually & emotionally absent.
• See a lot of activity, but fail to see any real signs of progress.

3rd GEAR- Warning Signs!

You know you have an unhealthy 3rd gear if you:

- Procrastinate and avoid 4th gear work.
- Need a party to make life exciting.
- Actively avoid social settings because of shyness or fear of what to say to others.
- Deplore 3rd gear moments out of arrogance or impatience and see it as a waste of time.
- Never go deep enough and remain superficial in relationships.
- Have a reputation for being lazy or that work is an inconvenience.
- Have a lack of discipline and professionalism in your work.
- Flit in and out of social gatherings, avoiding deep conversations.
- Appear to have a mask of superficiality and are reluctant to share.
- Have such a fear of missing out on social activities and others having a good time without you that it causes you to manipulate, become non-committal, or become flaky in response.

2nd GEAR- Warning Signs!

You know you have an unhealthy 2nd gear if you:

• Obsess about the key relationships in your life and not the person you are talking to.
• Find that your constant desire for depth in conversation keeps you from valuing 3rd gear connectivity.
• Talk too much and for too long as your normal tendency in conversation.
• Spend an inappropriate amount of time caring for people at work rather than working.
• Put unrealistic expectations on people to connect, and eventually isolate yourself.
• Constantly struggle with having the right conversation in the wrong context.
• Are so present focused that you struggle to see the big picture.

You know you have an unhealthy 1st gear if you:

- Accept escapism from reality as your norm.
- Get lost in a new book or new idea most of the week.
- Devote too much time to 1st gear and not connecting with others.
- Focus on exercise and diet so much that it becomes overbearing or a barrier to relationships.
- Find that your personal recharge routines constantly dictate everyone else’s schedule.
- Binge on TV series and use computer gaming to escape.
- Rely completely on a very small number of relationships without connecting to the broader world.
